~~Is Kinship Always Already~~

~~Heterosexual~~

Marriage is often seen in heterosexual context.

Kinship is most comfortably defined only in the ambit of a recognizable kin relationship either affinal or consanguineal. A classical definition of family is fixed on the legitimacy of heterosexual relationship. Thus, marriage is a legal status, a fulcrum in establishing family.

Heterosexual? The topic of gay marriage is not the same as that of gay kin-ship, but it seems that the two become confounded in U.S. popular only that marriage is and ought to remain a heterosexual institution and bond but also that kinship does not work, or does not qualify as kinship, unless it assumes a recognizable family form.

Implicit in all of this is a very strict construction of gender, and an assumed rigid construction of heterosexual kinship. A patrilineal naming system assumes that there will be two parents, and that one of them will be male and one will not.

While non-heterosexual reproduction and family-making has long been viewed as monstrous, increasing LGBTQ rights and recognition has instead insisted on its normality. Engaging with feminist and queer monster theory, and building on ethnographic research in Stockholm, Sweden, this article considers the monstrous remains within contemporary queer kinship.
