Litecoin is one of the earliest cryptocurrencies, built on Bitcoin's code. Because it closely mimics Bitcoin, is considered one of the more robust blockchain networks, and is regularly used as a testbed for new second-layer Bitcoin code. Unlike fiat currencies that can be printed at a whim, Litecoin is hard-capped.

Litecoin has a lifetime cap of 84 million coins, which is about four times more than bitcoin. In contrast, bitcoin has a cap of 21 million coins, and the currency is further along in its growth cycle, meaning that fewer coins are available. Fewer coins available can translate to a higher value for each coin. Litecoin has faster block generation.
